

VERBAL COMMUNICATION IN THE INTERCULTURAL CONTEXT

Alma Lleshi Tandili

Vitrina University, Tirana, Albania. E-mail info@vitrina.edu.al

Abstract

It has been found that Intercultural Communication in general involves many elements, and a very important element is verbal communication. Today in the world there are many examples that illustrate the importance of language in this process where the languages spoken in the world today there are about 6000 among which 10 are more important such as: Chinese, English, Spanish, Bengaline, Indian, Portuguese, Russian, Japanese, German, and French. What is to be found is: How can I communicate with people and how to use language to become better intercultural communicators? It should teach each of us a second or third language? To solve this problem it will be treated in this way: 1. We identify components of language and discover the dynamic connections between language, meaning and perception. 2. Then we try to discover the cultural differences of language and the way people communicate. 3. It is important to understand what it means to be a good speaker or listener? To answer this question we have to analyze the features that have spoken and the features that have the process of listening. In both cases, both through speaking and listening in different cultures have tapes sense, the importance of speaking and listening based on the understanding feature is almost the same, but different cultures have developed specific features or talking or listening.

Keywords: intercultural communication, language, cerbal communication, power of language.