Abstract

The aim of this piece of scientific paper is to demonstrate that the inner form of the language which serves as a means of expressing the psychic content of it, is the most concrete and evident demonstration of the particular features and special characteristics a language possesses especially in terms of dialectal lexicon and phraseology as it transmits and conveys the national spirit, point of views and general outlook. As language is people's creation and product, it seems that especially in lexical dialectal field, people themselves have dissolved their spirit, their mentality, their way of thinking and understanding. As far as we can consider dialect as a vivid and fluid microsystem incorporated within the whole macro system of the language, being product of a long historical tradition and developments it serves us to fully understand and analyze all the social, cultural, economic and material conditions as evidence of the national inner world and outlook. Our paper will treat, analyze and will draw some conclusions related to the reflection and accomplishment of the inner form of the language, taking into consideration different aspects of lexicon such as compounds, idioms, euphemisms, onomatopoeic words, phraseological units etc. This language units will be analyzed and compared between the two Albanian dialects and some of the language sub dialects as well, firmly supporting the idea that being people's natural product, language serves as a mechanism of transmitting the inner world and perception reinforcing that in the course of time, due to different life conditions and life styles and because of specific social and cultural conditions, language and vocabulary seems to differ a lot from region to region presenting many differences, which will be discussed in details in this paper.
