Abstract

Nowadays the increase of communicative ability is seen as a crucial aim in learning foreign languages. Success in foreign languages is not usually measured in relation to someone's ability to use the language but in relation to knowledge he has concerning language and the ability to manipulate with it. If this ability will be obtained during foreign languages learning, our future experts will be able to exchange information, communicate with foreign partners of different cultures, to gain from their colleagues' experience in the field of science and culture and what's more important to be able to survive in today's global context. As in all other fields even in that of learning English for Specific Purposes the development has been so rapid so that necessary updates and a common core curriculum drafting for all faculties of the same branch are needed in the whole Europe. The experience shows that in our faculties ESP teaching is not in line with the practical needs in specific fields. This gap will be eliminated if in our universities a common core curriculum according to European standards in English teaching for specific purposes will be drafted. The aim of this specific common core curriculum for English language is the quality increase of our students and future experts to give them the necessary background for further studies. The enlargement of the European Union adds a number of challenges, opportunities and requirements to the work in the field of English acquaintance for specific purposes. The development of high quality education and training is crucial and calls for further action to introduce instruments to ensure the increase of quality in the preparation of future specialists able to be in line with their European colleagues.
