

THE IMPACT OF SOCIAL FACTORS IN THE SOCIALIZATION OF CHILDREN

Ardita Ceka¹ RAbije Murati² Ibish Kadriu³

¹State University of Tetova, Tetovo, Rep. of Maqedonia. Email: arditaceka@yahoo.com

Abstract

As a special kind of a living human individual is born without skills and knowledge on how to manage objects, behave with people without speaking and communication skills and without any culture. The individual socialize throughout his life, he develops and changes as a result of the imposition of rapid development of science, technology, culture and technology, which requires mental change adaptation skills and abilities of the constructive and creative activity in new situations, in a form of new communication and professional orientation and reorienting. Socialization is a process that requires the full mobilization of the individual's physical and psychological and educational factors harmonized action. Place in the process and impact of individual action in social circle interacts with other social factors. The family is the basic factor that affects the implementation of this very important process, starting with the birth of the individual. It offers children a permanent family in villages or towns, also determines the child's social class, national ethnic-religious etc. Other social groups that affect the socialization of children are: schools, peers, mass media, etc. So norms of behavior and generally change their behavior and altered forms. Individual to ensure his existence and his family must necessarily modify that behavior and adopt new norms and forms of behavior to the life and work properly.