Abstract

The political systems and politics are functional when serve to the public, in order to create a better and fair society. The development of certain economic factors such as : the pluralist ideas, politicization of the population with the purpose of increasing governmental participation etc, brought to the realization of these ideas realization in practice, making it more achievable for the society. This was also reflected in the completion of the term "government" with the term 'governance'. " In this period the role of the political parties increased. The participation of the citizens in government, was reflected prominently in their personal development, their individual moral and intellectual. In the basics of the system of liberal democracy is the restriction of the rules. This is conditioned from constitutionalism and democracy which is realized by the broad participation of different social groups in governance and authoritative allocations of values for the society. It is important not equalize politics with the goals and the purposes of the politicians that do not serve to the public. Above all, it should be noted that politics is a human activity, everyone has its own impact on the governmental system through constitutional provisions which contain the rights and freedoms as well as impose constraints. The consensus on fundamental values helps the stability of a democratic system.
