

THE INFORMATION RIGHT A FUNDAMENTAL HUMAN RIGHTS

Besmir Alushi

University of Tirana, E-mail: besmir.alushi@hotmail.com, Albania

Abstract

Information is the oxygen of democracy. It is not simply a need for people but a necessary for good governance and more democratic. For the importance of this right, mention the fact that as a right it finds space, and is reflected in the European Convention of Human Rights. Also it is mentioned in Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and in basic Albanian highest state act in Constitution, in various organic laws in different decisions, orders or directions of government. This right derives from the principle of democratization of the legal order, and the independence of public administration. As a fundamental right, its purpose is to enable that activity of institutions carried out the most transparency, also it must be clearly visible, with the sole purpose of public survey. In purpose of this right, the mechanism which makes it possible, is media. In other words, the fourth power is the one that plays the main role in informing the public. This makes possible to reduce corruption in the public administration, in the institutions service and increase efficiency in the work of public administration.

Key words: Right, information, public, laws, institutions.