

POWERS AND PSYCHOLOGICAL COUNSELING PROSPECTS IN THE NURSING PROFESSION

Dukata Radoja

European University of Tirana, Department of Education, Tirana, Albania,

Email: d.radoja@hotmail.com

Abstract

Powers of psychological counseling can help improve daily life in the profession and in the service of people who turn to medical personnel. How can become psychological skills training packages for doctor and nurse. Nurses are the staff should know and respect the needs and skills of their patients (Williams, 1995;. McWilliam, et al, 1997), these very important element for building a nurse-patient relationships (HAGGMAN-Laitila and asted -Kurki, 1994, Lindsey and Hartrick, 1996;

The task of nurses is not only to care for the patient physically but also to facilitate the participation of patients in educational work and health, at the same time his duty can also be a form of psychological counseling in order to facilitate the mood of patient caused because of the illness being faced .

Nurses, because of the nature of their work, through constant contact with their patients are thought to have more opportunities to understand the patient's condition. Do they often face situations that require professional skills but also consulting skills to provide assistance to patients with chronic diseases, with special needs, or who have lost a relative, etc. The purpose of this article is to describe the role of psychological counseling in the nursing profession.

Key words: psychology, counseling, healthcare, the nurse